Fans Travel from USA to See Stargate SG-1 Star on Stage

Teryl Rothery, who played Dr. Janet Fraiser on the hit series Stargate SG-1, has a devoted, international following who keep close track of her career through the internet. Teryl will be appearing on the Vancouver stage in Edward Albee's A Delicate Balance, which opens this week at the Jericho Arts Centre. Tempus Theatre, producers of A Delicate Balance, has had bookings from Teryl-fans in both California and Massachusetts who will be travelling up to Vancouver to see the show. The Californian runs a website dedicated to all things Teryl.

This isn't the first time this has happened to a stage production that Teryl has starred in. Last summer, a fan flew all the way from Germany to see her perform Kate in Taming of the Shrew and Lois in Kiss Me Kate as part of the Showcase Festival on Vancouver Island.

A Delicate Balance, an intense, family-drama that won Albee the Pulitzer Prize when it was first produced, must seem like a million miles from the science fiction worlds of Stargate SG-1 but Teryl is equally at ease in both.

"One of the joys of being an actor is the opportunity to play so many different types of roles in different settings," explained Teryl. "People talk about high culture and pop culture, but as an actor you look at the quality of the role. The approach is just the same. As for the fans coming up from the US, it's a real honour that they would go through so much effort."

Teryl's involvement in A Delicate Balance demonstrates the incredible intersection between film, television and theatre that occurs in Vancouver. In addition to her work with Tempus, Teryl will be appearing in the upcoming Universal Pictures film Whisper featuring Josh Holloway (Lost) and Dule Hill (The West Wing). She was also in the just released White Noise II and had a guest spot on a recent Babylon 5 movie.

Interviews with Teryl can be arranged.
